

HumanProgress

Humanity has made dramatic progress in recent decades, but have those gains been widely shared?

In her recent research on global inequality, our managing editor Chelsea Follett found that as living standards have risen, the world has also become more equal across a range of indicators.

On September 8th, Chelsea will discuss her findings at a Cato Institute policy forum alongside her co-author Vincent Geloso and Nicholas Eberstadt, a political economist at the American Enterprise Institute.

Tune in live to ask questions and participate in the conversation.

Learn more and register here.

Early next month, Chelsea will discuss her upcoming book, Centers of Progress, at another Cato Institute forum.

She will be joined by our editor Marian Tupy and the sociologist Jack Goldstone, who will discuss the historical factors that make cities into engines of progress.

Register here.

PREORDER HERE

Facebook Twitter Instagram YouTube Email